PASCHAL CANDLE HISTORY (Part – 3)

Then it became customary to keep the Paschal Candle intact and reserve it near the Baptismal Font. However, records show that well into the 16th Century, the Paschal Candle which in some places weighed up to 300 pounds! was melted down after Easter time and was 'reused' to make the candles that were used at funerals for the poor. Back then, it was customary to put 6 candles around a casket or catafalque, 3 flanking each side; some may recall this was done at President Kennedy's Requiem Mass in 1963. In the 12th Century, it became customary to inscribe the numerals of the current year into or onto the Paschal Candle. Around this time it also began to take its present form: a 3 to 6 foot candle, large enough to be a primary symbol of the Risen Lord, shining as The Light of Christ, who leads us through the darkness of this world yet light enough to be carried in procession and be moved for Baptisms and Funerals. It then began to be referred to as the 'pillar of flame' recalling the 'pillar of flame' that led the Israelites at night during their Passover journey from Egypt. (To be continued...)
